The Colonial Time to the End of the 18th Century. CHAPTER I. The Settlement Of Tidewater Virginia. N the history of German immigration to the English colonies of North America during the last century Virginia takes a prominent share, says the late Vice-Governor of Illinois, Gustav Koerner, 1) and he might have dated this statement hack to the earliest time of colonization. The early immigration of Germans to Virginia differs essentially, it must be admitted, from that under the leadership of Win. Perin and Franz Pastorius to Pennsylvania, for unlike these it was not organized or compact. With the forenamed there came at once a large number of Germans to the New World, numerous additions followed and they kept together and founded German settlements which have preserved their national character to this day. But into Virginia the Germans immigrated singly, without a leader of their own nationality and without connection among themselves. Not until the beginning of the eighteenth century a German mass-immigration commenced from North Carolina, Pennsylvania, New Jersey and the Fatherland. The first comers scattered during the first decades of the colony over all its various sections, and yet the influence of this immigration proved of the greatest value to the development of Virginia or Attanough Komouch, the Indian name of the country. 1. ) Das deutsche Element in den Ver. Staaten von Xord-Amerika, von G. Koerner Selte 403. Cincinnati, Ohio, 1880. The civilization of all countries began with the...
