In response to a congressional request, GAO reviewed private sector inventory management practices to determine whether the Department of Defense (DOD) could apply these practices to its inventories. GAO found that: (1) top private sector managers significantly lowered their inventories and maintained them at the lowest possible level consistent with their operations; (2) many companies use just-in-time concepts and deliver parts as they are needed to improve inventory flow; (3) integration of accounting and inventory stock systems improved record accuracy and sound internal controls increased inventory record reliability; (4) some companies had computerized inventory systems that automatically generated reorders without human intervention; and (5) most companies monitored the performance and productivity of individuals and groups within the company as well as the performance of vendors and carriers. GAO also found that: (1) DOD could improve inventory management by using private sector concepts and procedures; (2) the basic difference in inventory management between the private sector and DOD is that the military services hold inventory to support missions with no-fail objectives; and (3) since DOD encouraged the services to utilize the inventory management expertise available in the private sector, the Navy has identified 33 methods to improve its inventory practices. This item ships from La Vergne, TN. Paperback.
