Book Condition: New. Publisher/Verlag: Springer Netherlands | Dramatic changes in the attitudes toward human nutrition have taken place during the past decade. Food-related and medical professionals as well as consumers are now, more than ever before, aware of and concerned about diet, nutrition, and the beneficial and deleterious effects of food processing upon nutrients. The old saying "We are what we eat" is still relevant. Nutritious food will contribute greatly to consumers' good health and ultimately reduce medical bills. Food processing is essential to maintaining our food reserves from one harvest to another, thus letting us serve our daily meals regularly. If food processing is defined as including all treatments of foodstuffs from harvest to consumption, then more than 95% of our food may be considered as processed. In most cases, food processing and storage cause some reduction in the nutritional value of foods. Advances in food science and food technology have resulted in an increase in nutrient retention after processing. In addition, today's consumer better understands how to avoid excessive nutrient losses during food preparation. The information presented in this completely revised reference and textbook will help the reader to understand better the relationship between food processing and nutrient retention. The authors' scholarly contributions are greatly appreciated. | 1 Introduction.- 1 General Discussion on the Stability of Nutrients.- 2 The Major Food Groups, Their Nutrient Content, and Principles of Food Processing.- The Major Food Groups and Their Nutrient Content.- The Principles of Food Processing.- References.- 2 Nutrients in Food-Raw and Processed.- 3 Effects of Agricultural Practices, Handling, Processing, and Storage on Vegetables.- Major Chemical Components of Vegetables and Their Nutritional Significance.- Effects of Agricultural Practices on Nutritional Composition of Vegetables.- Effects of Harvesting, Handling, and Storage on Nutritional Composition of Vegetables.- References.- 4 Effects of Agricultural Practices,...
