Excerpt: .natural enough; he then felt certain of the prize. She s worth catching--such an heiress is not to be met with often. No, and the gentleman did not require to be informed of that fact. The greatest marvel to me is that he should have got her with so little trouble; they say her parents did not make much objection. Ah, he knows how to manage affairs of that kind; he has been busy in worming himself into the good graces of the old folks for some time past, and as they suppose him to be wealthy in addition to his profession, there was no fault to be found in him. Well, unless I m mistaken, he s got some one now that can spend money for him. I don t believe he has counted the cost of flounces and finery; but he ll...
